For some time Barrie has placed all his plays with the American manager, and the latter has produced them in both London and New York, but in the case of this play, to everybody's astonishment, the London production will be made by Granville Barker. It will be put on at the Kingsway in the fall, succeeding "The Great Adventure," which cannot, of course, run on forever. The new play is of a fanciful character and, it is to be hoped, for the good of all concerned, that Barrie will publish an explanation of what he is trying to do for the use of the critics, who went hopelessly astray over "The Adored One."
